The Cukarica Shipyard employs approximately 1,000 workers and 200 officials and supervisors. Attendance of workers and clerks at the scheduled meetings is very lax, and the Communist Party cell representatives are obliged to resort to force to boost attendance. On 24 April 1980, after working hours, all doors of the shipyard were locked in order to prevent the workers from leaving and to force them to attend the meeting. The workers, however, climbed over the walls and escaped. Crowds gathered in the streets, and the supervisors were obliged to open the doors and let the workers out.
